NEWS CLIPPING

"When will this change? Not soon." Technology certainly has played a role in energizing the summer atmosphere on the Street. Thanks to tools such as cellular phones and laptop computers, it's as easy to trade stocks feverishly from a beach house or mountain cabin as it is from a brokerage office downtown.

Market reaction times to news developments have been shrinking for years. Where investors once might have waited until after Labor Day to assess prospects for the fall,

A good many other observers, however, insist that the recent declines are a healthy development that has helped cool a market that was in danger of getting too hot.

"This is a classic correction, and the bull market isn't over," maintains Kenneth Fisher, chief executive of the investment management firm of Fisher Investments in Woodside, Calif.

"Bear markets don't begin with low interest rates, a strong dollar first as routine passing storms.

Concludes Smith at Prudential Securities, "1998's stock market can't be labeled 'bullish' or 'bearish.' Some measures of the market are now down for the year to date, yet the large, multinational companies are up.

"In the future, a brighter, profit environment could create more opportunities in stocks. But don't expect any substantial profit improvement soon."
