DEAR HARRIETTE: My roommate and I get along well, except when it comes to her boyfriend. I don't have an issue with his personality or the fact that they are together. What bothers me is the amount of time

they spend in our room. He sleeps over every weekend and even some nights during the week. I feel like I am walking on eggshells in my own room, and I am so sick of it. How do I approach this situation without coming off as a crazy roommate? - Frustrated

Roommate, Philadelphia DEAR FRUSTRATED ROOMMATE: Boyfriends and roommates almost always cause friction. The fact that you and your room-

only makes it worse. You need to set boundaries with your roommate when her boyfriend isn't around. Tell her that you like him fine, but you don't want another roommate -- you want your space back, at least some of the time. Ask her to work with you on scheduling so that he comes over less frequently. Maybe she can go over to his place sometimes? Tell her how awkward you feel in your own room and that you need to work out

Do know that you may need to look for another roommate. Typically, when serious boyfriends enter the scenario, somebody ends up moving.

DEAR HARRIETTE: I still wear the necklace my ex-boyfriend got for me when we were together. We broke up over three years ago, but it is a very nice necklace that I love wearing.

My current partner hates that I still wear the necklace because he thinks I do it to stay connected to my ex. As absurd as it sounds, and as much as I have tried convincing my boyfriend I wear the necklace only because it's nice, he is insistent on me not wearing it. Do I have to stop wearing the necklace from my ex? - Wear My Ex's Necklace, NECKLACE: Take a walk in your boyfriend's shoes for a moment. How would you feel if he were wearing an item of jewelry given to him by his ex? I doubt it would make you feel comfortable. In this instance, I think your boyfriend is right. Put the necklace away, at least for now. Grow your relationship without any encumbrances from the past. Tell him that you value him more than a piece of jewelry, and you are not interested in your ex anymore.

Ideally, you should get rid of the necklace. Sell it, pawn it, get some money for it and buy yourself something beautiful that is no longer attached to the man from your past.

Black Oak Bar opens at Penn National

Staff report

Chambersburg Public Opinion
USA TODAY NETWORK - PENNSYLVANIA

FAYETTEVILLE - Penn National Golf Course Community has announced the opening of the Black Oak Bar at the Founders Grille in the clubhouse.

Operated in partnership with Center Square Brewing of Abbottstown, the new Black Oak Bar will feature locally crafted beers and other Pennsylvaniabased wines and distilled beverages.

The bar's name honors the nearly 200-year-old Champion Black Oak tree that grew majestically on the property near the Penn State Mont Alto Campus. This champion Black Oak grew from 1840 until it fell in 2017, living through the Civil War and the Industrial Revolution. The tree was loved and climbed by decades of PSU Forestry students.

The Black Oak Bar will pay homage to this historic tree by featuring historic photos and other memorabilia throughout the bar area. At 110 feet tall and 243 inches round, it was almost two times as

Parts of this champion tree are being preserved and will appear in the bar in the future. A historic profile of the tree is being created by Dr. Daniel Druckenbrod, director of sustainability and associate professor in the geological, environmental and marine sciences department of Rider University in New Jersey.

The Founders Grille and Black Oak Bar are open to the public daily in season. The Founders Grille opens at 6 a.m. for breakfast and serves all day. The Black Oak Bar is open daily 10 a.m. to 10 p.m.

Metal Township supervisor elected in state group

Staff report

Chambersburg Public Opinion
USA TODAY NETWORK - PENNSYLVANIA

HERSHEY - Members of the Pennsylvania State Association of Township Supervisors have elected Anna Swailes, a supervisor and secretary-treasurer for Metal Township in Franklin County, to a one-year term as assistant secretary-treasurer.

The election took place during PSATS' 96th Annual Educational Conference and Exhibit Show, held April 22-25 in Hershey. This is the largest municipal event of its kind in the state, with close to 4,000 attendees. The conference attracted township officials from every county in Pennsylvania except Philadelphia, which has no townships.

The assistant secretary-treasurer is a member of the association's Executive Board with full voting rights. The board, which is made up of PSATS' five officers, seven Executive Committee members, and the immediate past president, is responsible for managing the affairs of the state association. It meets frequently throughout the year to oversee association business and plan new projects that will benefit member townships.

The Pennsylvania State Association of Township Supervisors represents Pennsylvania's 1,454 townships of the second class and is committed to preserving and strengthening township government and securing greater visibility and involvement for townships in the state and federal political arenas. Townships of the second class cover 95 percent of Pennsylvania's land mass and represent more residents — 5.5 million — than any other type of political subdivision in the commonwealth.

Swailes previously served on PSATS' Executive Committee and is currently a member of the association's Audit Committee and Grassroots Advocacy Network, which addresses legislative issues that affect every Pennsylvanian who lives in a township of the second class. She is also the board liaison to the association's Secretary-Manager Committee and is a workshop moderator at PSATS' Annual Educational Conference. She previously served on the association's Legislative Committee. She is a past recipient of the PSATS President's Leadership Award and was presented with the 2018 Governor's Award for Local Government Excellence.

Her service to Metal Township includes delegate to the Franklin County Council of Governments, secretary of the Franklin County Tax Collection Board, and delegate and assistant secretary-treasurer of the Chambersburg Area Wage Tax Board. She serves on the advisory board of the Holy Spirit EMS for Franklin County Advanced Life Support and is assistant secretary for the Metal Township Municipal Authority. She served previously as the authority's secretary-treasurer and as treasurer of the Franklin County Association of Township Officials Swailes, who is certified as a government secretary through the Pennsylvania Association of Municipal Administrators, is a member of the Franklin County Emergency Services Alliance and the legislative committees with the Franklin County Farm Bureau.

She previously served as president of the Franklin County Community Action Program, founder and co-chair of the Franklin County Farm Bureau Promotion and Education Committee, and member of the Pennsylvania Farm Bureau Planning and Evaluation Committee. She was a leader/trainer for the Pennsylvania Farm Bureau, a member of the Franklin County Cooperative Extension Dairy Committee and the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture Farm Safety and Occupational Health Advisory Board, and the minority inspector of elections for the Franklin County Metal Third District.

She also has served as a canvasser for the American Cancer Society, Franklin County Unit, and as treasurer for the Dry Run Church of the Brethren. Swailes, who received the Outstanding Achievement and Leadership in Agriculture Award in 2003 from the Kiwanis Club of Chambersburg, is secretary of Swailes Farms LLC. She and her husband, Bill, live in Willow Hill.

Dr. David Bowman (Keir Dullea) faces the great unknown in novelist Arthur C. Clarke and filmmaker Stanley Kubrick's 1968 work of art. AP

It's the 50th birthday of a film that was supposed to be — and definitely is — "the proverbial 'really good' science fiction movie," and Michael Benson's exhaustive new book about the making of 2001: A Space Odyssey stars the two men at the center of an influential powerhouse.

In 1968, 2001 changed the game for the sci-fi genre. Until that point, science fiction movies were mainly considered trash. Then a couple of cultural giants — novelist Arthur C. Clarke and filmmaker Stanley Kubrick — got together and created an astounding, philosophical and downright Homeric work that explored evolution, artificial intelligence and the existence of alien life in the universe.

Space Odyssey: Stanley Kubrick, Arthur C. Clarke and the Making of a Masterpiece (Simon & Schuster, 512 pp., ★★★☆) effectively chronicles all of it, down to the smallest spaceship details and the most petty business decisions.

The book presents in a fairly straightforward manner the four years between director Kubrick and author Clarke's initial meeting and 2001's release. They were fans of each other's work: Kubrick, coming off Dr. Strangelove, yearned to make a groundbreaking sci-fi epic, and the older Clarke, a sci-fi icon even then, wanted to break into Hollywood. They became a cinematic equivalent to McCartney and Lennon, two talented visionaries who became friends and creing the friction between them.

And something as mind-blowing and esoteric as 2001, which begins with early man-apes discovering a black monolith and then blasts into the future with astronauts dealing with an AI on the verge of a breakdown (the antagonistic HAL-9000), is going to have its setbacks.

Benson skillfully digs into the budget-busting actions and plot problems, because the script was constantly changing during filming and it took forever for Kubrick to figure out the trippy ending. It's enlightening stuff, especially for casual fans of the movie, about how Kubrick got struggling actors to learn their lines and the near-mutiny of the special-effects department when the filmmaker considered having his main characters travel to Saturn instead of Jupiter.

Hardcore 2001 nerds will dig the nuts and bolts of the designs of the "Dawn of Man" opening and the memorable Star Gate sequence. There's loads of trivia (the movie's costumer plotted the assassination of Nazis!) and Benson weaves in supporting personalities who put readers on ground zero of the filming chaos. But, like a good Beatles tune when those two songwriters are clicking, Space Odyssey is fueled by the dynamic between Kubrick and Clarke.

Both had their egos, sure, yet powered through differences to make something great. Clarke had to deal with other personal business during the making of 2001 and worried that Kubrick would be bothered by his homosexuality (he wasn't). And the filmmaker himself, who had a reputation for being brilliant but cold, is given a fair amount of warmth by Benson: One passage finds Kubrick directing his young daughter for a voice-over that's more than a little adorable.

Space Odyssey is a solid companion piece to a sci-fi classic, both for newbies trying to figure out the movie's existential questions and longtime HAL lovers who want to know everything about two guys and their grand movie mission.

States slash prison spending, reap costly results

Riot in S.C. ends with bodies stacked in vard

Steve Reilly USA TODAY

Eight years ago, lawmakers in South Carolina embarked on a bold plan to reform the state's criminal justice system.

A 2010 criminal justice reform package, aimed at cutting the number of people sent to South Carolina prisons for low-level offenses, led to a 14 percent drop in inmates by 2016.

That allowed the state to close three maximum-security prisons and slash millions of dollars in annual prison spending from its budget.

While South Carolina's prison system now ranks among the country's cheapest for taxpayers, it is also under scrutiny after seven inmates were slashed to death April 15 in the nation's deadliest prison riot in a quarter-centu-

South Carolina's cost cutting went beyond just imprisoning fewer people. State officials also reduced mental health and other programs aimed at rehabilitation and eliminated amenities and activities. In some prisons, it also has meant mixing violent and non-violent inmates and fewer guards.

The same kinds of cuts have been happening across the nation from New Jersey to Nevada. After decades of constant growth, the nation's prison population peaked in 2009 before decreasing 7 percent between 2009 and 2016.

Across the country, states slashed prison spending by more than $200 million between 2010 and 2015. Meanwhile, violence appears to be on the rise, according to a USA TODAY review of public records, lawsuits, academic studies and news reports.

Slayings reported inside prisons almost doubled over a decade, from about four homicides per 100,000 to about seven killings per 100,000 inmates in 2014, according to the most recent data published by the U.S. Bureau of Justice Statistics.

While the federal government doesn't maintain data on prison riots, state records and news media accounts show there were at least nine prison riots nationwide in 2017 — matching levels last seen in the 1980s.

While efforts to reduce South Carolina's prison population stemmed from good motives, the push to defund prisons is likely contributing to recent violence, said Hannah Riley of the Southern Center for Human Rights.

"If not done really carefully, then this ends up being the result of it, which is really tragic," she said.

While state officials attributed the seven-hour riot at Lee Correctional to gangs, some blamed the outbreak of violence on living conditions.

"I believe that conditions not just at Lee but all across our state are deplorable, are third-world, and don't reflect the kinds of standards that we have an obligation to uphold in this state," South Carolina state Rep. James Smith said.

All seven inmates killed in the riot bled to death after being stabbed, slashed and beaten, according to Lee County Coroner Larry Logan. Cellphone images show the bloodied bodies of the dead stacked in the prison yard.

Problems in South Carolina's prisons began coming to light long before the Inmates complained in lawsuits that South Carolina's prisons are home to "uncontrolled violence," where there are far too few guards, cells are left unlocked and gangs "run free and commit whatever crimes they want within the ment," according to some of the 160plus lawsuits filed against the state Department of Corrections since 2015.

"There is no simple fix," said Bert Useem, a professor at Purdue University who has studied prison riots. "Crucial is strong, effective administration. This means more than military discipline. It also requires provision of programming, cell space that's adequate and amenities to a reasonable degree."

In South Carolina, last year's violence included an incident in which two prisoners at Kirkland Correctional Institution in Columbia said they strangled four fellow prisoners to death. They lived in a block where their cells were left unlocked because they were considered trustworthy. One told a reporter they killed because they wanted to be executed, saying they could no longer bear the conditions of prison life.

Experts say maintaining proper staffing levels is key to preventing prison riots and disturbances — a persistent problem in South Carolina, where one in five of the state's prison guard jobs are vacant. In the federal prison system, the ratio is about one corrections officer for every 10 inmates. The riot at Lee occurred with 44 guards on staff for 1,583 inmates — one guard for every 35 or so prisoners.

"Forty-four at Lee is good," South Carolina Department of Corrections Director Bryan Stirling said at a news conference after the riot.

Not all experts agree with Stirling's

"That certainly sounds like a small number of staff for that number of inmates," said Michele Deitch, a senior lecturer at the University of Texas at Austin's Lyndon B. Johnson School of Public Affairs, who added the security level and layout of a facility must also be taken into account

You need to have adequate numbers of well-trained, high-quality staff who are properly deployed," Deitch added. "And that's just a given in any prison system if you want to operate it safely."

South Carolina's spends $20,053 per prisoner. That's the ninth-lowest in the U.S. in 2015, according to data compiled by the non-profit Vera Institute of Justice. The state cut overall prison spending 2.4 percent over those five years.

Chinese restrictions on imports creates recycling industry crisis

Penn Waste is just one of many recycling companies in the US feeling the pain after China implemented drastic changes to imported recyclable material.

In January, China imposed radical changes to the levels of contamination they allow in recyclable material and implemented a plan to reduce imported recyclable material while increasing their domestic recovery capabilities.

"The recycling industry was unside down basically turned upside down overnight," said Amanda Davidson, Director of Marketing for Penn Waste.

Previously, China allowed 5 percent contamination, or 92 pounds of trash, in a 1,850-pound bale of recycled paper. Beginning in 2018, China changed those restrictions to a 0.5 percent contamination rate, or 9 pounds of trash in a 1,850 pound-bale of recycled paper

This is an unrealistic number that recycling companies cannot meet

"Single-stream recycling makes it easy for customers to recycle but we've seen a dramatic increase in contamination since switching to this method in 2008," said Davidson. "People just throw items in the recycle bin whether its recyclable or not. There are significant consequences if trash is mixed in with the recycling."

Those consequences are currently having an impact on the entire US recycling industry. Since China is the largest buyer of recyclable material, there are limited domestic outlets to get rid of it.

Penn Waste continues to develop short-term and long-term solutions to manage the unpredictable recycling markets, rising contamination rates and other rising business costs.

"At the end of the day, this is not just a Penn Waste issue. It is a global issue," Davidson said. "Recycling is required in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. There is value in recycling but there is also a cost to provide this service. The recycling industry as a whole is revising our pricing model and moving from a commodity-based pricing model to a fee for service pricing model."

Harford County Public Schools seeks applicant for audit committee

The Board of Education of Harford County is seeking applications from interested county citizens to fill one opening on the school system's audit committee.

The purpose of the five-member committee is to assist the board in fulfilling its fiduciary oversight responsibilities.

The committee serves as an independent and objective party to monitor the Harford County Public Schools financial reporting process and internal controls.

The core function of the audit committee will be to validate the internal auditor's strategy, plan, and performance and seek assurance that action is taken where necessary.

The audit committee consists of five members, two from the board of education and three at-large Harford County citizens.

Citizen members serve a threeyear term and are appointed at staggered intervals. Members are appointed by the board of education and may serve two full terms.

The committee meets at least quarterly to review the activities of the Office of Internal Audit. Regular attendance is important in maintaining the continuity and effectiveness of the committee.

Audit committee members serve without compensation.

Interested individuals should have audit, accounting, or related financial management experience and be able to read and understand financial statements.

A Certified Public Accountant or Certified Internal Auditor is preferred.

Any Harford County resident interested in applying should send a letter of interest and a biographical sketch to Laura Tucholski, Internal Auditor, Harford County Public Schools, 102 S. Hickory Avenue, Bel Air, MD 21014, by May 10, 2018.

Letters of interest should include name, address, phone number, and background information containing: reasons for interest in being appointed, a professional resume, and disclosure of any relationships to Harford County Public Schools, such as family members employed by Harford County Public Schools; children and the school(s) they attend; membership in community, social and civic groups; occupation; business contracts with Harford County Public Schools; and availability to attend evening meetings.
