Wolf: Courts, not church fund, better for abuse victims

ASSOCIATED PRESS

HARRISBURG – Pennsylvania’s governor said Friday he was against a proposal to compensate victims of child sexual abuse by priests through a church-established fund, saying that lawmakers instead should amend state law to let victims sue over decades-old events.

Democratic Gov. Tom Wolf said changes to the state’s statute of limitations and other proposals in a recent grand jury report “would deliver what victims deserve,” but a fund outside the court system would not.

Wolf said the Legislature should pass reforms proposed in the jury’s 900-page report issued earlier this month. The jurors said the state should eliminate the criminal statute of limitations for child sexual abuse, give otherwise time-barred victims a two-year window to file lawsuits, clarify penalties for failing to properly report abuse and ban agreements that prohibit victims from cooperating with police.

The jury’s investigation found that hundreds of “predator priests” in six dioceses sexually abused at least 1,000 children going back seven decades, and senior figures in the church hierarchy systematically covered up complaints.

Earlier this week, the top-ranking Republican in the state Senate, President Pro Tempore Joe Scarnati, floated the idea of a church-established victim fund, and some church officials have reacted positively.

On Friday, Scarnati’s top aide, Drew Crompton, said compensation funds have worked effectively in several states and argued a fund in Pennsylvania, administered by a third party, will compensate victims quickly. Crompton called the proposed two-year “window” for lawsuits “constitutionally questionable.”

He said Wolf’s opposition came even though the details of the fund have not been determined.

Man who shot trooper in roadside battle gets up to 110 years

ASSOCIATED PRESS

EASTON – A man convicted of attempted murder for opening fire on two Pennsylvania state troopers during a traffic stop last fall was sentenced Friday to up to 110 years in prison.

Daniel Clary, 22, shot and critically wounded 13-year veteran Cpl. Seth Kelly, who was helping another trooper arrest Clary in Northampton County. Clary had been pulled over for speeding and failed field sobriety tests.

A judge sentenced Clary to 55½ to 110 years in state prison.

Kelly, who was shot four times and nearly bled to death, spending 12 days in a medically-induced coma, confronted his assailant in court.

“If you would have cooperated ... and not taken the law into your own hands, none of this would have happened,” Kelly told Clary. “I pray you never get released from prison.”

Cpl. Seth J. Kelly

During the confrontation, the troopers hit Clary with a stun gun and wrestled him to the ground, but he managed to break free, retrieve a pistol from his car and open fire on Kelly and Trooper Ryan Seiple.

Both troopers returned fire, hitting Clary several times. Clary then fled and drove himself to a hospital.

The wild roadside battle, which played out as cars hurtled past, was captured on a police dashcam video that was released to the public after trial.

Clary’s lawyer tried to argue that her client feared for his life when he shot at the troopers.

His uncle, David Clary, testified that he had brain damage from sports and from being assaulted, calling him a “good kid.”

Couple ordered to turn over funds raised for homeless man

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOUNT HOLLY, N.J. – A couple who raised more than $400,000 for a homeless man after he used his last $20 to fill up the gas tank of a stranded motorist in Philadelphia must now turn over what’s left of the cash.

A New Jersey judge issued the order Thursday during a hearing on the lawsuit brought by Johnny Bobbitt, who worries Mark D’Amico and Katie McClure have mismanaged a large part of the donations raised for him on GoFundMe.

The couple deny those claims, saying they’re wary of giving Bobbitt large sums because they fear he will buy drugs.

The judge ordered the couple to transfer the money into an escrow account by the end of business Friday and hire a forensic accountant to review the financial records within 10 days.

The money will be transferred to an account controlled by Bobbitt’s lawyers but can’t be used until the judge determines how it will be managed. The judge didn’t appoint a guardian to oversee the fund, but one could be appointed later.

McClure set up the online fundraiser page as a way to give back to Bobbitt, who came to her aid when she ran out of gas on an Interstate 95 exit ramp late one night. It raised more than $400,000 in funds donated by more than 14,000 people.

Bobbitt walked a few blocks to buy McClure gas. She didn’t have money to repay him at the time, but sought him out days later to give him the money, and visited him a few more times to bring food and water. They later appeared on shows like “Good Morning America” and were interviewed by the BBC.

But the relationship has gone sour. McClure and D’Amico have repeatedly denied any wrongdoing or misusing any of the money. D’Amico has said Bobbitt spent $25,000 in less than two weeks in December on drugs, in addition to paying overdue legal bills and sending money to his family.

The couple also bought Bobbitt a camper with some of the funds and parked it on land McClure’s family owns in Florence. But Bobbitt became homeless again after D’Amico told him in June that he had to leave the property.

During an appearance Monday on NBC’s “Megyn Kelly Today” show, D’Amico told Kelly there was well over $150,000 left of the donations.

After flooding, residents begin task of cleaning up

Ted Czech
York Daily Record
USA TODAY NETWORK – PENNSYLVANIA

Kim Michener stuffed some rugs by her front door in Hellam Township on Friday afternoon, crawled out her front window, then clambered onto the flat-bed of a repurposed U.S. Army truck.

About an hour before, she received an alert on her phone about the storm and looked out her back window of the Tourist Inn’s apartments.

The water of the creek was rushing and crashing, and from then, it didn’t take long for its level to creep up several feet until it was just under the window sill, she said.

“We were all rescued,” she said of the apartments’ residents. “All your belongings, you don’t want to leave them, but at the same time, you know you have to go.”

On Tuesday, with the mud in the Tourist Inn’s parking lot drying and caking, Michener set about cleaning her home, along with help from friends.

The carpets had all been torn out, rolled and thrown in two massive dumpsters in the parking lot. Michener said she planned on repairing the floors, but not re-carpeting; instead, she would put down a bunch of throw rugs. Other items were able to be salvaged and just needed to be sanitized.

Michener and five others were rescued from the apartments, located in the 600 block of West Market Street, near the intersection with Kreutz Creek and Freysville roads, by Hellam Township and Wrightsville firefighters.

“Within a half-mile of that intersection, we pulled 28 people to safety,” in less than two hours, Wrightsville Fire Chief Eric Strittmatter said Tuesday. “Some were in the water, some were in vehicles surrounded by water.”

Hellam Township Deputy Fire Chief Scott Livelsberger said the vehicle used for the rescues was a 5-ton truck formerly used in the military that was redeployed to his department.

Rescuers in danger

Sometimes, even the rescuers need to be rescued.

On Friday, three emergency workers were operating a boat in the 200 block of Freysville Road, attempting to rescue someone from their home.

However, navigating a boat in a creek, river or lake is not the same as maneuvering it in murky, turbulent waters chock full of trees and pieces of guide rails, Strittmatter said.

“The boat got turned downstream by the current,” he said. “They couldn’t manage. They got out of the boat and hung on to some trees.”

Hellam’s 5-ton truck was able to make its way to the area and pick them up, Strittmatter said.

High waters halt rescue efforts

Livelsberger said that in the midst of the storm, flooded waters on Kreutz Creek Road prevented his pickup truck and a Hellam Fire truck from responding to a house fire on Chimney Rock Road.

“We couldn’t go anywhere,” he said. “We saw that the road was 3 to 4 feet deep. There was no way we were driving up Kreutz Creek Road.”

They had no choice but to pull over and wait about an hour-and-a-half until the water level subsided, he said.

Meanwhile, they listened to rescues on West Market Street at the Freysville-Kreutz Creek roads intersection on the scanner, growing frustrated knowing they could not get there to help.

“We couldn’t do anything,” he said.

As it turned out, a Wrightsville truck was able to avoid the flooded area and take an alternate route to the fire. The fire was a small one and was extinguished by the homeowner, Livelsberger said.

Eventually, the water rolled back enough that they were able to continue answering calls for rescues, downed wires and trees and washed out roads.

“I’ve been at Wrightsville for 25 years; I’ve never seen flooding that bad,” Livelsberger said.

This Civil War monument was washed away from the road in Friday’s flash flooding. The base washed a couple hundred feet farther. Resident Eileen Musser hopes to get the monument, which marks where a Civil War soldier was found dead, farther away from Dugan’s Run. PAUL KUEHNEL/YORK DAILY RECORD roadway toward the river during the storm Friday.

Residents Glenn and Eileen Musser had found the marker, and Ferree said that he helped clear some debris away from it.

Ferree also helped Glenn Musser identify the base of the marker, which was washed several hundred feet out into the Susquehanna River into a debris field of dried mud and rocks.

The Mussers hope to have the marker moved farther away from Dugan Run. It identifies the spot where a Civil War soldier was found dead. The original marker was washed out into the Susquehanna River during a storm in 2011, according to Eileen Musser.

She described the torrent she heard Friday as sleepy Dugan’s Run turned into a raging river.

“When the water came down out of the creek, it sounded like thunder because of all the boulders being pushed down through it, and it was muffled by the boulders being under the water,” Musser said.

“It was such a strong stream that it forced a channel of water upstream (on the Susquehanna River) and threw that water up 8 feet into the air just like a big fountain out there.”

Erosion from Friday’s storm created a new land mass at the mouth of Dugan’s Run jutting out about 200 feet into the Susquehanna River.

Jerry Franek, who has lived on River

Road since 1967, thought back to Hurricane Agnes in 1972. He remembers accessing his property by boat, and having to push the utility wires up -- still attached to their poles -- over his boat.

Franek said that he has seen the road wash out a few times in 50 years but this latest event was unusual. There was so much erosion, yet the river level remained the same.

Farther up River Road, an iconic structure nestled in a gorge with Wildcat Falls was undamaged except for some mud in a first-floor entry room, said Deb Snyder, who owns the home with her husband, Ken.

The couple donates use of the home to five charities, auctioning off “A Night at Wildcat Falls” during their fundraising banquets, according to Snyder.

The creek scoured away a new driveway, which was recently repaired, and destroyed a parking area beneath River Road. Water from Wildcat Falls backed up during the storm and flowed over the roadway. Snyder said the water came up about 6 feet alongside the home.

On Accomac Road in Hellam Township, state Department of Transportation has opened the badly eroded road that follows a creek, with one lane for local traffic. The road is controlled by a temporary traffic signal allowing travel in both directions.

A bridge at River Road and Accomac Road has been completely destroyed and River Road will remain closed there until repairs can be completed.

“It’s been a long weekend, and it’s going to be a long road ahead of us too,” Ferree said.

Waters off New England in midst of record year for warmth

Trend could affect marine life in Gulf of Maine

Patrick Whittle

PORTLAND, Maine – The waters off of New England are already warming faster than most of the world’s oceans, and they are nearing the end of one of the hottest summers in their history.

That is the takeaway from an analysis of summer sea surface temperatures in the Gulf of Maine by a marine scientist with the Gulf of Maine Research Institute in Portland. The average sea surface temperature in the gulf was nearly 5 degrees Fahrenheit above the long-term average during one 10-day stretch in August, said the scientist, Andy Pershing, who released the work Thursday.

Aug. 8 was the second warmest day in recorded history in the gulf, and there were other sustained stretches this summer that were a few degrees higher than the average from 1982 to 2011, Pershing said. He characterized this year as “especially warm” even for a body of water that he and other scientists previously identified as warming faster than 99 percent of the global ocean.

“We’re seeing really unusual conditions all over the planet this year. Wildfires and heatwaves. Unusual conditions. The Gulf of Maine is part of that story,” Pershing said.

The Gulf of Maine resembles a dent in the coastal Northeast, and it touches Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts and Atlantic Canada. It’s the nerve center of the U.S. lobster fishing industry, an important feeding ground for rare North Atlantic right whales and a piece of ocean that has attracted much attention in recent years because of its rapid warming.

The gulf warmed at a rate of about 0.1 degrees Fahrenheit over the past 30 years, which is more than three times the global average, Pershing said. That rate has jumped to more than seven times the global average in the past 15 years, he said.

The warming of the gulf is happening at a time when the center of the U.S.

lobster population appears to be tracking northward. America’s lobster catch is still high, but rising temperatures threaten to “continue to disrupt the marine ecosystem in this region,” said John Bruno, a marine ecologist with the University of North Carolina who was not involved in Pershing’s work.

“Warming in the GOM has been pushing out native species like cod, kelp and lobster, and fostering populations of species typically found in the Carolinas,” Bruno said. “Although it’s an extreme example, it mirrors what we’re seeing across most of the world.”

The gulf has seen temperatures above the 90th percentile for more than five consecutive days this year, which constitutes a “marine heatwave,” Pershing said. It has set 10 daily temperature records this summer after setting 18 over the winter, he said.

The warming is bad news for the rare right whales because it affects the availability of tiny organisms they eat, said Jeffrey Runge, a research scientist with Gulf of Maine Research Institute and the University of Maine.

It’s symptomatic of warming oceans all over the world, Runge said.

“There are very large, not regional, drivers for this change,” he said. “Until we work on the global drivers of warming, I don’t see any way to stop this.”

Fired cop who shot fleeing man in back charged with homicide

Claudia Lauer
ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHILADELPHIA – A fired white Philadelphia police officer was charged Tuesday with criminal homicide for fatally shooting a black man in the back after a confrontation last year over a dirt bike.

Thirty-year-old David Jones had a gun on him when he was frisked by Officer Ryan Pownall, leading to a struggle, but he had thrown it to the ground and was running away when the officer shot and killed him, prosecutors said.

“Jones was no danger to anyone in his flight,” according to a grand jury that recommended charges be filed.

Pownall, who was fired from the force last year but is appealing, surrendered Tuesday morning. He was held without bail on the homicide charge.

His attorney called the former officer’s actions justified, given Jones had an illegally obtained gun on him. The police union issued a statement saying the charges show first-year District Attorney Larry Krasner, a former civil rights lawyer, “has an anti-law enforcement agenda.”

Krasner said he believed it was only the second time in nearly 20 years that a Philadelphia officer had been charged with a crime for an on-duty fatal shooting.

He said such charges are “regrettably unusual in the history of the city of Philadelphia. Because this is a city like many other American cities, where there has not been accountability for activity by police officers in uniform especially when that activity involved violence against civilians.”

According to the grand jury report, Pownall was taking several witnesses including two children to the Special Victims Unit when he saw Jones riding a dirt bike on a city street.

Jones’ bike had stalled and he pulled into the parking lot of a night club. Pownall also pulled into the lot, and when he frisked Jones, he felt a gun.

The grand jury said accounts about what happened next varied. The officer’s attorney said the victim pulled his gun from his waist. All those involved agreed a scuffle ensued, prosecutors said, and that Pownall tried to shoot Jones but that his gun jammed.

Surveillance footage showed Jones dropping his gun on the ground and running, and Pownall opening fire, shooting Jones twice in the back.

Pownall told another officer he saw Jones toss his gun, which came to rest about 25 feet from where the officer opened fire and in the opposite direction from where Jones was fleeing, the grand jury said.

The grand jury concluded “there is no indication how Pownall could have reasonably believed Jones was still armed or dangerous.”

“He was shot twice in the back, while he was unarmed and running away. At no point did Jones turn toward Pownall or gesture in a threatening manner,” the grand jury wrote.

Pownall also faces a charge of reckless endangerment for firing in the direction of several cars that were waiting at a red light.

“Today is the day that the family of David Jones has been waiting for,” Isaac

Gardner, one of the most visible protesters after the shooting, said on behalf of the Jones family.

Police Commissioner Richard Ross said during a news conference last year announcing Pownall’s suspension that Pownall’s first attempt to shoot at Jones was justified under department policy but that the additional shots, when Jones had clearly dropped the gun, was 10 feet away and had his back turned, did not.

The shooting prompted protests across the city, including a Black Lives Matter demonstration outside Pownall’s home. Police union president John McNesby later called the protesters “a pack of rabid animals.”

According to police records, it was the second time Pownall, on the force 12 years, was involved in an on-duty shooting where a suspect was struck in the back.

Carnell Williams-Carney was paralyzed in 2010 after Pownall and a second officer fired shots at him as he fled, hitting him once in the back. A federal jury ruled in a lawsuit that Pownall and the other officer were justified in opening fire.

Lawyer for homeless man: $400K in donations is all gone

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOUNT HOLLY, N.J. – The lawyer for a homeless man in Philadelphia whose selflessness led to donations of over $400,000 through an online fundraising page said Tuesday that all the money is gone.

Johnny Bobbitt’s attorney, Chris Fallon, said he learned to his surprise that the cash was gone during a call with lawyers for Kate McClure and Mark D’Amico.

“Shocked. Shocked,” Fallon said when he heard word. “They raised this money to help Johnny Bobbitt get money for food.”

McClure and D’Amico are the couple accused in a lawsuit brought by Bobbitt of mismanaging donations raised for him through GoFundMe. The couple deny the claims in the suit, saying they’re wary of giving Bobbitt large sums because they fear he will buy drugs.

GoFundMe spokesman Bobby Whithorne says the company is working with law enforcement to ensure that Johnny Bobbitt gets all the money raised for him after he used his last $20 to help a woman get gas.

“While we assist law enforcement with their ongoing investigation, GoFundMe is also working with Johnny’s legal team to ensure he’s receiving support while the remaining funds are being recovered,” Whithorne said in a statement.

He also said the company gave $20,000 to an account set up by Bobbitt’s attorney “to provide assistance” to him during the investigation.

McClure and D’Amico’s attorney, Ernest Badway, told The Associated Press they have no comment.

The story has gained international attention.

'The PA Line: York to Downtown' topic of meeting

On Saturday, September 8 at 10:30 a.m., regional author, historian, and storyteller John Moore will share the story of a soldier mutiny that took place in York in 1781 during the American Revolutionary War.

"The PA Line: York to Downtown" is the topic of the August Second Saturday session. The lecture takes place at the Historical Society Museum, Library & Archives at 250 E. Market Street, York.

Continental troops, under the command of General Anthony

Wayne, angered by low and late pay and the fact that their currency was not accepted by York merchants, mutinied in May of 1781.

Discover this little known story, and find out what Wayne did to end the discord and later lead his soldiers to victory at Yorktown, Virginia only a few months later.

All Second Saturday sessions are free and open to the public. No registration is required.

For more information, visit www.yorkhistorycenter.org or call 717-848-1587, ext. 301.

Registration open for PA German Research Conference

All interested persons are urged to register and attend The Pennsylvania German Research Conference on Saturday, September 22.

The conference is sponsored by the South Central Pennsylvania Genealogical Society.

The keynote speaker is June Lloyd, Liberian Emerita at The

York County History Center and her address is "The Pennsylvania German World of Lewis Miller."

There will be workshops on Pennsylvania German Research and General Genealogy. The full schedule of sessions and a registration form is available at www.scpgs.org.

Obituaries

BERLIN O. WRIGHT JR.

Berlin O. "Rabbit" Wright Jr. of Dublin, Maryland went to be with his Lord on Thursday, July 26, 2018 at his home with his loving family by his side after a courageous battle with cancer.

Rabbit was born April 30, 1939 in Baltimore, MD to Berlin O. Wright Sr. and Nellie Flaherty Wright of Dublin, MD.

He is survived by his wife of 43 years, N. Dolores Wright; son, Jonathan Scott Wright (wife Tesha DuBree Wright); and two grandchildren he dearly loved, Brady Lee and Piper Mackenzie of Pylesville, MD.

He is also survived by his brothers, Allen Wright of Colorado and his beloved adopted brother in Christ, Jeff Jefferson, Baltimore, MD.

Rabbit was preceded in death by his parents; brothers, Robert Wright, Willard Wright, and Herbert Wright; and nephews, Mark Wright and Nick Hooks.

In 1958 he completed The Maryland Fire Service Extension and joined Darlington Volunteer Fire Company. In 1959 he joined the Army to serve his country. He was honorably discharged in 1964.

He was a truck driver/owner-operator leased to A. Duie Pyle and Carolina Freight Line from 1965-1978. In 1978 Rabbit went to work for James K. Laird for two weeks and stayed over 40 years with Laird until his death.

Rabbit was a Master Mason for 37 years and member of Stephenson Lodge #135 AF & AM, Darlington, MD, a member of the BOUMI Temple, Scottish rite, Past Patron of Darlington Chapter #105, and Order of the Eastern Star 1983-1984. Rabbit was a member of Emory United Methodist Church and Associate Member of the Darlington Volunteer Fire Company.

A memorial service will be held 1 to 2 p.m. Saturday, September 8 at Emory United Methodist Church, 911 Cherry Hill Road, Street, MD. A Masonic service begins promptly at 2 p.m.

Officiating at the memorial service will be Pastor Stephen Smith of Emory United Methodist Church.

In lieu of flowers the family would appreciate contributions to Emory United Methodist Church (Wright Memorial Fund), P.O. Box 94, Street, MD 21154 or Darlington Volunteer Fire Company (Wright Memorial Fund), 2600 Castleton Road, Darlington, MD 21034.
